Excerpt: .applied to the removal of Sennacherib from Jerusalem, xxxvii. 29. And also, exactly as in the text, to the overthrow of the nations that shall be gathered at last against it, Ezek. xxxviii. But while this shall be the portion of those who have spoiled and robbed Judah, her deliverance will be accomplished; sorrow and sighing will flee away and give place to mirth The succeeding verse (30) is an amplification of the 27th, with this addition, that the power of the elements is represented as being wielded by the Lord against his enemies, xxviii.17. That some miraculous manifestation of divine power is intended by the voice of God--by his tongue being as a devouring fire--is evident from the clause, he shall cause his glorious voice to be heard. Judgments of an ordinary character would not produce this effect. By this miraculous voice, the use...
