On each side of these seats is a wall, and on the top of the wall are six most remarkable looking ancient wooden chests surmounted with crowns, and upon these mortuary chests Latin inscriptions. As a boy I longed to have a look inside these chests, but never got a chance. Since then, some three years back, I had an opportunity of looking into them. I found that they really did contain human bones, mostly arm and leg bones, and if I recollect rightly no skulls. The bones were very dusty, but hard, dry and firm, and did not show the least symptoms of decay. These bones are said to be the remains of kings and princes, but I much question their authenticity. The Dean and Chapter would do well to allow a competent body of medical men and antiquaries to examine...
